SOCIOLOGY (SOC)

While all social sciences are interested in understanding human behavior, sociology is distinguished by its focus on understanding patterns of human behavior and emphasizing the social forces that shape and influence these patterns. Often, this perspective is surprising and can challenge assumptions of how the world works. The subject matter of sociology is broad—anything about social life one is interested in can be (and likely has been) studied by sociologists. Ultimately, students of sociology develop an appreciation for ways in which social structures and culture shape the world they live in and thus shape their own lives.

This breadth of social life is reflected in the sociology curriculum. After taking SOC 101 Introduction to Sociology (GT-SS3), which is a prerequisite for other sociology courses, students are free to pursue other areas of interest. Courses on social institutions (such as family, medicine, and the criminal justice system), social processes (such as the relationship between the self and society, social movements, and deviance), and social stratification (such as race, class and gender) represent the rich diversity of social life that sociologists are interested in understanding. These offerings are complemented by grounding in social theory and methodology. As a social science, sociological knowledge is based on empirical observation and analysis that is informed by and informs social theory.

The standard major provides a mix of seven core courses and six elective choices. Students with an interest in criminal justice can pursue a concentration in that area by taking an additional list of core courses in the criminal justice emphasis. Students who wish to pursue a minor take the introductory course and then choose five elective courses. SOC 101 Introduction to Sociology (GT-SS3) and SOC 168 Social Problems also fulfill Area I General Education requirements. Sociology majors are encouraged to take MATH 113 Statistical Thinking (GT-MA1), to fulfill the general education mathematics competency requirement.

In addition to classroom instruction, The Sociology Club and the International Honors Society in Sociology, Alpha Kappa Delta, are active on campus with social and intellectual activities. While sociology provides a useful perspective for any kind of employment, graduates typically find employment in social services, law enforcement, teaching, and research.

Program Goals

- The Sociology Program's main goal is to graduate students who understand and can apply the perspective of Sociology to their everyday lives, relationships, and experiences in social institutions including the family, the workplace, and civil society. This includes training students to recognize the relevance of sociological theories and methods in examining social life.
- The Sociology Program's second goal is to encourage students to actively engage in the University and in their community while attending Western, to train students to use the tools of sociology in doing so, and to continue such community involvement after graduation.
- The Sociology Program's third goal is to prepare qualified graduates to pursue advanced degrees in Sociology or related social science disciplines. Whether or not students pursue graduate study, the Sociology Program aims to prepare all students for entry into careers related to the discipline or for advancement in an already-achieved career.

Capstone Course Requirement

The following courses in the Sociology Major fulfill the capstone course requirement: SOC 498 Capstone, or SOC 399 Internship in Sociology (Criminal Justice Emphasis).

Sociology Courses

SOC 101. Introduction to Sociology (GT-SS3). (3 Credits)
An introduction to the discipline of sociology with special emphasis on the unique perspective this science utilizes to examine the social world. Sociology is distinguished by its focus on understanding patterns of human behavior and emphasizing the social forces that shape and influence these patterns. Primary course focus is on culture, inequality, race and gender, and social institutions. This course serves as a ‘gateway’ course for all Sociology majors and minors, and must be passed with a minimum grade of ‘C’ to be used as a prerequisite. Prerequisite for all 200-, 300-, and 400-level Sociology courses. GT-SS3

SOC 150. Environmental Sociology. (3 Credits)
The sociological perspective is utilized to examine a variety of issues addressing the human-environment interface. In particular, this course examines how social organization and culture both shape and are shaped by the natural environment. The course focuses on issues of sustainability, the rights of the natural world, and environmental justice.

SOC 168. Social Problems. (3 Credits)
An introduction to the field of sociology through an analysis of social problems in the United States and in the world. Course focus is on topics such as drugs and alcohol abuse, crime and prisons, health and illness, hunger and poverty, resource depletion and pollution, and the effects of globalization.

SOC 197. Special Topics. (1-6 Credits)
SOC 211. Quantitative Research Methods. (3 Credits)
Students deepen their familiarity with quantitative social science, casual reasoning, and research design. Emphasis on creating rationales for choosing methods such as field experiments and survey questionnaires, with opportunities for practical experience in assessing and creating research design and instruments for gathering quantitative data. Students enhance their fluency in interpreting descriptive and inferential statistics and the logic of hypothesis testing. Prerequisites: SOC 101 with minimum grade of C; and MATH 113 or MATH 140. Or instructor permission.

SOC 225. Self and Society. (3 Credits)
An examination of how the discipline of sociology approaches micro-level phenomenon. Emphasis is on the formation of the self, the socialization process, and the importance of language to social interaction.
